

Peter Boecher, with TBG, and Near Northwest Management District board member Julie Grouthes, check out one of the maps on display at the Livable Centers Study open house hosted by Advent Lutheran Church.

Sharing their vision

Hundreds of northwest Houston residents shared their thoughts and visions of what the Antoine Corridor could be during an April 26 open house at Advent Lutheran Church that focused on a Livable Centers Study being conducted by the Houston-Galveston Area Council.

The Livable Centers Study is focusing on the Antoine Corridor area from Pinemont to West Gulf Bank, T. C. Jester to Bingle/North Houston Rosslyn. The study is looking at existing forms of transportation, support infrastructure, current and potential use of land for business and residential or green space in the area. It will also develop concepts, an implementation plan and potential funding opportunities.

See next week's issue for a followup on the study.